the Trent, Capt. Moir, bound to the island fallen the heaviest calamities. of St. Thomas," and it is unfortunate for them that they were not permitted to pursue a journey so auspiciously commenced. They further say, they "paid their passage money for the whole route from Havana to Southampton," but whether in "Confederate bonds," or in gold, with the American eagle stamped thereon, commonly known as Uncle Sam's currency, they do not state. We conclude that inasmuch as this is the only allusion they make to the payment of their passage, they wish to have it understood that what they thus paid was a dead loss to them, and that the Captain of the Trent refunded no portion of the "fare' which they

"paid in advance." They further say that while the Trent was "pursuing her usual course," (and while, perhaps, Mason and Slidell were cracking their champagne,) a shotted gun was fired by the San Jacinto "across the course of the Trent." Of course, in the language of "Honest Abe," "nobody was burt." But the Trent "hove to," and was boarded by a Lieutenant of the U.S. N., "with full crews armed with muskets and side arms." Mason and Slidell left their champagne, and appeared with "most of the passengers on the upper deck" of the Trent The impudent Lieutenant called for the 'passenger list." Captain of the Trent refused to produce it, and "formally protested against any right to visit his ship for the purpose indicated.' (Captain of the Trent knew, then, the character and mission of his "passengers.") Mason and Slidell say he was indignant at the outrage of taking them from the Trent, and "protested" against it. Captain of the Trent claimed the right, in the name of the British Government, to carry rebel ambassadors and dispatches. An officer in the naval uniform of Great Britain, and "known to the passengers as having charge of the mails," said to the United States Lieutenant, that "as the only person present representing his government, he felt called upon, in language as eal hact." But all witbout avail. The hun. feeling Lioutenant was hobdurate. Mason and Slidell were transferred, "by force," to the San Jacinto, and thus lost the money they had paid as "fare to Southampton." But ed to Fort Warren by the liberality of the United States government, free of charge! They close their protest by declaring that their "brief narrative is believed to be correct," and respectfully ask Com. Wilkes if it is not so. The Com. replies in a note, that it is not correct, but "differs materially from the truth in time and circumstances," as appears from the log-hook and the report of all the officers who visited the Trent! Poor Mason and Slidell! Cheated out of their "fare to Southampton," carried by force to the San Jacinto, incarcerated in Fort Warren, in due time to be dealt with according to law for treason, and branded as liars by Coin. Wilkes.

The idea of two such criminals making a "protest" against their capture! As well might the horse-thief or murderer protest that the sheriff, armed with a warrant, violates his "personal rights" by making an arrest. Mason and Slidell must be brought to a realization of the fact that they are felons, and not "ambassadore."

In conclusion, this "protest" furnishes the most conclusive evidence that the captain of the Trent was fully aware of the character of his passengers, and so is brought clearly within the terms of the Queen's Proclamation of neutrality, which declares, "that any English vessel carrying munitions of war, or dispatches, for either belligerent, will do so at its own peril and cannot elaim any protection of the British Government

> ARREST OF RUBELS BY FEDERAL AUTHORIrtes .- Deputy U. S. Marshal C. B. Pettit, of Bourbon county, arrived in Covington on Tuesday, having in custody C. C. Rogers, of Paris, and John Higgins, of Magoffin county, both noted rebels, who have for a length of time been giving aid and comfort to the rebels. Higgins was taken prisouer in Montgomery county, a few days since, by Capt. G. N. Hall, of Col Epperson's regiment, and has been supplying the rebels with provisions and other means of sustenance. Rogers had a number of letters in his posession, from parties of this State, to friends and relatives in the Southern army

> One of the letters is from Frank Troutman, of Paris, law partner of Wm. E. Simms, now a Captain in the rebel army, and it details the condition of Simms' property and affairs, and conveys other information quite nteresting to the rebel Captain. Rogers has been carrying on this private mail system for a long time, and was a most valuable ally of the rebels. He was arrested at Paris, and the twaiu were sent down to the U S.

> authorities in Covington for imprisonment. he news of the arrest got abroad, and some secession sympathizers in the city made an effort to produce the release of the prisoners on a writ of habeas corpus, but Deputy U. S. Surveyor E. H. Samuels, who had the matter in hand, had anticipated the movement by taking them over to Cincinuati, where they were placed in the eustody of U. S. Marshal A. C. Sands, and the probability s that by the time this account meets the eye of our readers, Messrs. Higgins and Rogers will be on their way to a place of perfect security.

> BE READY -We think, says the Shelby News, it would be advisable for the loyal Union men of this and every other county in the State, to organize a cavalry company of one hundred to one hundred and fifty men. The companies should be well mounted and armed, and thoroughly drilled; and ready at a moment's notice to put down and crush out, in the incipient stage, every treasonable move of the tories within their respective counties, or adjoining counties. And whenever an overtact is committed to pursue the parties and arrest them and hold them to a strict accountability.

It demonstrates how un. licensed would be their revelings in demoniae ontruges, it they had the power All such demonstrations should be promptly met, and summarily joinished. Fashions for January.

The fashions for the next month are topes of some interest to the ladies just now. The latest magazines inform us that narrow bands of velvet have again become fashionable as a trimming for plain or neglig dresses. Six, seven or nine bands is th number usually employed for the skirt, and they may be of two different widths, those of the narrower width being placed alterbaldi Skirt, it is said, is to produce a revoution in ladies' costume. It is made of printed flannel, merino, muslin de laine printed cambric, velvet, silk or eashmere In shape and pattern it is made in the same way as a gentleman's shirt, with plaits is ront extending just below the waist, ful sleeve, small collar, and cuff turned down he ends are left so as to go underneath the lress skirt, and are long enough to allow of the skirt hanging over in bag fashion all round, producing an easy and graceful ef-found favor for bridal costumes; some of the newest wedding dresses being made of white satin. Fashion has made white almost uniform for evening dresses. Ribbons, bows and flowers are used in trimming.

The Swin cape is very popular for evenng dre. s, and is to be worn over a low-necked body. It is made of muslin with narrow tucks or folds. It is finished at the throat by a narrow row of black velvet, and is edged on each side by a broad row of velvet, torm ng braces, and terminating in a bow at the waist, both before and behind. Whilst dresses continue to be worn long, and require the skirt to be raised up in promenading, the petticoat will always be an object of some mportance in costume. However pretty he petticoats of former seasons may have been, those of the present year are even more so. They are now made in almost every color and material, and are ornament ed with trimmings the most varied.

Nets, consisting of black and colored che on Monday, in St. James street, London, to nille, still continue to be a fashionable style
